

- This lecture provides a quick introduction to Impressionism, the Post-Impressionists, particularly Paul Cézanne, Divisionism/Pointillism, the Fauves and Matisse
- The lecture ends with the exhibition held by Roger Fry in 1910 called Manet and the Post-Impressionists. This is regarded as a turning point and the time when developments that had taken place in France over the previous 20 years were seen in England. Although made fun of by the critics it changed the way many artists worked.

Notes

- The following are not covered as they were covered in the course last year.
 - Introduce the influence on England Whistler, English Impressionists
 - New English Art Club
- Camille Pissarro (1830-1903) is the only artist to have shown his work at all eight Paris Impressionist exhibitions, from 1874 to 1886. He 'acted as a father figure not only to the Impressionists' but to all four of the major Post-Impressionists, including Georges Seurat (1859-1891), Paul Cézanne (1839-1906), Vincent van Gogh (1853-1890, died aged 37) and Paul Gauguin (1848-1903).
- Roger Fry

- Created the name Post-Impressionist, started the Omega Workshop (Fitzroy Square), curator Metropolitan Museum, 'discovered' Paul Cezanne, Slade Professor
- Wrote An Essay in Aesthetics
- Organised the 1910 'Manet and the Post-Impressionists' Exhibition, Grafton Galleries. 'On or about December 1910 human character changed' Vanessa Bell.
- Organised the 1912 'Second Post-Impressionist Exhibition'.

References

- The main sources of information are the Tate website, Wikipedia, The Art Story and the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Verbatim quotations are enclosed in quotation marks. If it is not one of the references just mentioned then it is listed at the bottom of the relevant page.

QUESTIONS

- Was Carl Andre a sculptor?
- Who were the K Foundation?
 - Bill Drummond and Jimmy Cauty made £6 million in royalties, paid tax and spent the rest on various projects including art works consisting of £50 notes pinned to a board. A million. Finally, they burnt the last £1 million and signed a contract until 2018.
- Who commissioned Whiteread's House.
 - Artangel, Beck's Beer and Tarmac. Art angel also received funding. There were also 100 people, the 'Company of Angels' who fund invested in temporary works.
- Few British artists

Carl Andre (American, b. 1935) Pyramid (Square Plan), 1959 (destroyed), 1970 (remade), 174.96 x 78.74 x 78.74 cm, wood (fir), Dallas Museum of Art

Carl Andre (American, b. 1935) Pyramid (Square Plan), 1959 (destroyed), 1970 (remade), 174.96 x 78.74 x 78.74 cm, wood (fir), Dallas Museum of Art

- “Carl Andre assembled "Pyramid (Square Plan)" by stacking interlocking blocks of wood into a double pyramid pattern, with the weight of the material alone binding the work together. Andre worked for four years as a conductor and brakeman for the Pennsylvania Railroad, and he has said that all his sculpture is influenced by the repeated forms and material used in railroad track. This work is one of the earliest examples of Andre's sculpture. Andre would develop such ideas further in the 1960s into one of the most important bodies of minimalist art that redefined how sculpture was made, installed, and experienced.” (Dallas Museum of Art).
- Andre became re-acquainted with a former classmate from Phillips Academy, Frank Stella, in 1958. Andre shared studio space with Stella from 1958 through 1960. While sharing a studio with Stella, Andre developed a series of wooden "cut" sculptures. From 1960-64 Andre worked as freight brakeman and conductor in New Jersey for the Pennsylvania Railroad. The experience with blue collar labor and the ordered nature of conducting freight trains would have a later influence on Andre's sculpture and artistic personality. For example, it was not uncommon for Andre to dress in overalls and a blue work shirt, even to the most formal occasions.”

- The first three weeks are an introduction to modern art and a historical summary with few British artists mentioned although today I mention Constable and Turner. In two weeks we turn to British art and from then on few non-British artists are mentioned.

NEW WAYS OF SEEING: MODERN BRITISH ART

1. New Ways of Seeing
2. Impressionism, Post-Impressionism & Fauvism
3. Cubism, Abstraction and the British Avant Garde
4. Vorticism and World War One Artists
5. Return to Order: Stanley Spencer
6. Dada, Surrealism & Expressionism
7. British Sculpture & Henry Moore
8. World War Two Artists
9. British Figurative Art
10. Summary 1900-1950

- This talk goes back to the beginning of modernism and starts with John Constable and J. M. W. Turner. These British artists developed new ways of seeing the world that influenced French art. This was followed in Britain by the Pre-Raphaelites who broke with tradition and sought inspiration from the way that early artists looked at the world without the encumbrance of a tradition of 'Old Masters'. The most radical developments, however, took place in France, starting with the Impressionists and then the multitude of approaches we group under the heading of Post-Impressionism. Key figures were Paul Cézanne (1839–1906), Vincent van Gogh (1853–1890) and Henri Matisse (1869-1954). These three and many others were introduced to the London art scene in 1910 by Roger Fry and his exhibition Manet and the Post-Impressionists. Virginia Woolf wrote, "'On or about December 1910, human character changed.'" She wasn't referring to the general election, or the Suffragette movement, but to the impact of Fry's exhibition on British culture.

John Constable (1776-1837), The Hay Wain, 1821, National Gallery
 Eugène Delacroix (1798-1863), The Massacre at Chios, 1824, Louvre

- Starting at the beginning.
- The painting by John Constable (1776-1837) is Romantic and picturesque and was very innovative from the point of view of the techniques used but conservative in terms of the way it presents 'Merry England' (a term that had just been popularized by William Hazlitt in 1819) at a time of social unrest on the farms of England.
- Constable's technique was increasingly criticized by English critics during the 1820s but The Hay Wain was awarded the gold medal when it was shown in Paris in 1824. English critics complained about the bright colours which were not used by the Old Masters and the flecks of white paint that were described as distemper or snow. In terms of its subject matter we see farm labourers in the far distance manually cutting and lifting the corn. Farms were increasingly being automated and manual labour like this was 20 years out of date as Constable would have been well aware.

- The French artist Théodore Géricault (1791-1824) had been very impressed by Constable's painting in London when he saw it in 1821 and he was partly responsible for it being shown in Paris in 1824. Other French artists, when they saw Constable's work, were influenced by his natural colours, thick impasto and integrated technique.
- In 1824, at the Paris Salon, Eugène Delacroix (1798-1863) exhibited this painting, The Massacre at Chios. Delacroix was impressed by Constable's use of thick impasto and bright colours and it is believed that he reworked some of the landscape background. The French critics had mixed views about Constable's paintings and Constable was critical of French artists as he believed they imitated earlier artists and the objects looked as if they had been pasted onto the picture rather than being integrated.
- Constable, therefore, had some influence on the future direction of art in France although it may have been overstated by some art historians.

Notes

- Delacroix's painting shows the savage Turkish repression of the Greeks on Chios ('He-os') in April 1822. Delacroix depicted a landscape racked with fire, stretching desolately behind a group of prisoners awaiting execution. The Massacre is all but a manifesto in its liberated expression of light and atmosphere through colour; after it, 19th century painting could never be the same again.
- The Hay Wain was originally called Landscape: Noon.
- The Hay Wain was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1821, the year it was painted, but failed to find a buyer. It was seen in London by the French artist Théodore Géricault who arranged for it and two other works by Constables to be shown at the Paris Salon in 1824 where it caused a sensation and was awarded a gold medal by Charles X. It was bought in Paris by the dealer John Arrowsmith, brought back to the UK, sold to another dealer who sold it to Mr. Young. On his death it was bought by Henry Vaughan and later presented to the National Gallery. Vaughan bequeathed the full-size oil sketch to the South Kensington Museum (now the Victoria and Albert Museum).
- After seeing The Hay Wain Delacroix wrote, "What he says here about the green of his meadows can be applied to every tone."

References

<http://www.nationalgallery.org.uk/paintings/john-constable-the-hay-wain>

Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775–1851), Vermilion Towers, c.1834, gouache and watercolour on paper, 14.4 x 18.8 cm, Tate

- The other influential British artist was Turner. His work is often, retrospectively described as 'impressionistic'.
- This work appears to be a quick, impression that is made up more of shapes than details. The brush strokes seem quite hurried and loose, giving a very sketchy feel to this work. Turner has also worked into the work manually as evident by the fingerprints in the thicker gouache areas. What is interesting about this work is the way Turner has reduced the forms to blocks of solid colour. Consider the relationship between this experiment in colour and the work of the Fauves in the early twentieth century.
- However, many of Turner's works were sketches not finished paintings.

References

- <http://www.tate.org.uk/art/artworks/turner-vermilion-towers-d28965/text-technique-and-condition>

Joseph Mallord William Turner, Norham Castle, Sunrise c.1845, 90.8 x 121.9 cm, Tate

- “Turner first saw Norham, bordering Scotland on the river Tweed in Northumberland, in 1797. He was at the limits of his trip to northern England, when he also visited Buttermere, seen in the painting of nearly fifty years earlier shown nearby. After that first visit he made watercolours showing the ruin at sunrise, and visits in 1801 and 1831 resulted in further views. Here, finally, is one of a series of unfinished, unexhibited paintings reworking his monochrome Liber Studiorum landscape prints. Pure colours rather than contrasting tones express the blazing light as the historic building and landscape merge.” (Tate)
- Norham Castle is right on the border between England and Scotland on the south bank of the River Tweed. It was built in 1121 to protect Northumberland from the Scots but over the years it was captured by the Scots and then re-captured many times.
- The painting is filled with light and atmosphere and solid forms become transparent areas of primary colour that merge into on another. This, however, is an unfinished work that was not exhibited in his lifetime. It might have been a sketch or if he intended to exhibit it he might have finished it on varnishing day, just a few days before the opening of the Royal Academy exhibition.

Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775-1851), Light and Colour (Goethe's Theory) - the Morning after the Deluge - Moses Writing the Book of Genesis, exhibited 1843, 78.7 x 78.7 cm, Tate

- This was a finished painting and it is interesting as it shows a knowledge of colour theory. A scientific approach to colour was also taken by artists in France.
- There were a number of colour theories developed in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries that expanded on Newton's seventeenth century work. One of the main works was Goethe's Theory of Colours (Zur Farbenlehre) which influenced a number of artists, including J. M. W. Turner and the Pre-Raphaelites although it was rejected by physicists.
- In France Michel Eugène Chevreul (1786–1889) developed a colour theory while working at the Gobelins tapestry works. In 1839, he published the results of his research under the title De la loi du contraste simultané des couleurs; it was translated into English and published in 1854 under the title The Principles of Harmony and Contrast of Colours. When Chevreul worked at Gobelins he received complaints that the blacks appeared different when used next to blues. He determined that the yarn's perceived colour was influenced by other surrounding yarns. This led to a concept known as simultaneous contrast.

- Chevreul's work assisted artist aiming to reproduce nature as closely as possible. His colour principle influenced art in Europe, particularly Impressionism, Neo-Impressionism and Orphism.
- The critics were universal in their condemnation of these pictures,
 - the Spectator for 13 May 1843 found them intelligible as illustrations 'of Goethe's Theory of Light and Colour ... but further we cannot follow the painter. There may be some sublime meaning in all this ... but ... we see in these two octagon-shaped daubs only two brilliant problems—chromatic harmonies of cool and warm colours.'
 - The Athenaeum for 17 June as usual regretted 'Mr. Turner's flagrant abuse of his genius' but admitted that 'there is a poetical idea dimly described through the prismatic chaos, which arrests the attention and excites the fancy.'
 - For the Morning Chronicle, 9 May, they 'are perfectly indescribable, and seem to consist of atoms casually together hurl'd.'
 - The Times for 11 May called Shade and Darkness a 'ridiculous daub' and its companion 'A wretched mixture of trumpery conceits, involving an anachronism that the meanest scholar at a parish school could rectify.'
 - Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine for August, spurred by the recent appearance of the first volume of Ruskin's Modern Painters, was even more scathing. From Shade and Darkness, wrote the critic, 'we learn ... that, on the eve of the mighty Deluge, a Newfoundland dog was chained to a post, lest he should swim to the ark; that a pig had been drinking a bottle of wine ... that men, women, and children (such we suppose they are meant to be) slept a purple sleep, with most gigantic arms round little bodies ...' and so on.

Notes

- Turner owned a copy of Goethe's colour theory (Zur Farbenlehre) which proposes a colour-circle divided into 'plus' and 'minus' colours: the former, reds, yellows and greens, were associated by Goethe with gaiety, warmth and happiness, while the latter, blues, blue-greens and purples, were seen as productive of 'restless, susceptible, anxious impressions'. R.D. Gray has suggested that Turner's opposition between 'Light and Colour' on the one hand and 'Shade and Darkness' on the other was also a criticism of Goethe's theory that colour was the product equally of Light and Dark: Turner's 'Dark' picture he sees as the negation of colour. Gage, however, sees Turner's intention as the restoration of the equality of Light and Dark as values in art and nature. To the sublimity of darkness he added a sublimity of light. But the verses given to Light and Colour, which demonstrates the 'plus' colours, make it as pessimistic as Shade and Darkness. Turner transformed the rainbow of the Covenant into scientifically-induced prismatic bubbles, each one an ephemeral harbinger of hope, born to die. In addition the Biblical concordance between Noah's Covenant and that of Moses writing the Book of Genesis apparently on the Tables of the Law, with the Brazen Serpent foreshadowing the Crucifixion before him, must be seen in the light of Turner's constant use of the serpent as a symbol of evil.

References

- <http://www.tate.org.uk/art/artworks/turner-light-and-colour-goethes-theory-the-morning-after-the-deluge-moses-writing-the-book-n00532/text-catalogue-entry>

Eugène Delacroix (1798–1863), July 28: Liberty Leading the People, 1830, 260 x 325 cm, Louvre Museum

- Romantic history painting. Commemorates the French Revolution of 1830 (July Revolution) on 28 July 1830.
- Switching to France, Eugène Delacroix had a greater influence on later artists than any other nineteenth century artist. From the bold colours and abstract shapes of Matisse and Kandinsky, to the expressiveness of Van Gogh and Gauguin, to the vibrant complementary colours of the Impressionists. All can be traced back to Eugène Delacroix – the last painter of the Grand Style but equally one of the first modern masters.
- He was born in 1798 and made his debut at the Salon of 1821. Pierre-Auguste Renoir (1841-1919), Paul Cezanne, Vincent Van Gogh, Paul Gauguin, Odilon Redon (1840-1916), Henri Matisse (1869-1954), Wassily Kandinsky (1866-1944) were all influenced by Delacroix.
- Note that the person wearing the top hat and suit indicates that many revolutionaries in France were members of the middle-class or intellectuals. In Britain the protesters during the Swing Riots (1830), Bristol Riots (1831) and Chartist demonstration (1848) were mostly working class. In Britain the middle-class and the intellectuals believed in compromise and gradual change not in absolutism. Absolutism in Britain was associated with Roman Catholicism, foreigners and tyranny.

Notes

- July 28: Liberty Leading the People
- The Paris uprising of July 27, 28, and 29, 1830, known as the Trois Glorieuses ("Three Glorious Days"), was initiated by the liberal republicans for violation of the Constitution by the Second Restoration government. Charles X, the last Bourbon king of France, was overthrown and replaced by Louis Philippe, Duke of Orléans. Delacroix, who witnessed the uprising, perceived it as a modern subject for a painting; the resulting work reflects the same romantic fervour he had applied to Massacre at Chios, a painting inspired by the Greek war of independence.
- Delacroix began his allegorical interpretation of the Parisian epic in September 1830. His painting was completed between October and December, and exhibited at the Salon in May 1831.
- The peak of fervour occasioned by victory is represented in a pyramidal composition; the base, strewn with corpses, resembles a pedestal supporting the image of the victors.

References

- <http://www.louvre.fr/en/oeuvre-notices/july-28-liberty-leading-people>

Camille Pissarro (1830–1903), Jalais Hill, Pontoise, 1867, 87 x 114.9 cm, Metropolitan Museum of Art

- That brings us to the Impressionists and the 'Father of Impressionism'.
- Camille Pissarro (10 July 1830 – 13 November 1903) was a Danish-French Impressionist and Neo-Impressionist painter born on the island of St Thomas (now in the US Virgin Islands, but then in the Danish West Indies). His importance resides in his contributions to both Impressionism and Post-Impressionism. Pissarro studied from great forerunners, including Gustave Courbet and Jean-Baptiste-Camille Corot. He later studied and worked alongside Georges Seurat and Paul Signac when he took on the Neo-Impressionist style at the age of 54.
- The Impressionists used a number of techniques that individually had been used previously but taken together defined their style. They include:
 - Painting en plein air (outdoors), shadows are boldly painted with the blue of the sky as it is reflected onto surfaces, giving a sense of freshness previously not represented in painting.
 - The play of natural light is emphasized. Close attention is paid to the reflection of colours from object to object. Painters often worked in the evening to produce effets de soir—the shadowy effects of evening or

- twilight.
- Rather than compete with photography the Impressionists sought to express their perceptions of nature, rather than create exact representations.
 - Another major influence was Japanese ukiyo-e art prints (Japonisme). The art of these prints contributed significantly to the 'snapshot' angles and unconventional compositions and poses that became characteristic of Impressionism.
 - They painted modern life subjects, such as train stations, for the first time.
 - They used the latest technology, such as pre-mixed paint in metal tubes (invented in 1841 by John Rand) and boldly used the latest synthetic pigments such as cobalt blue, viridian, cadmium yellow, and ultramarine blue.
 - Short, thick strokes of paint are used to quickly capture the essence of the subject, rather than its details. The paint is often applied impasto (thickly).
 - Colours are applied side-by-side with as little mixing as possible, a technique that exploits the principle of simultaneous contrast to make the colour appear more vivid to the viewer.
 - Greys and dark tones are produced by mixing complementary colours. Pure impressionism avoids the use of black paint.
 - Wet paint is placed into wet paint without waiting for successive applications to dry, producing softer edges and intermingling of colour.
 - Impressionist paintings do not exploit the transparency of thin paint films (glazes), which earlier artists manipulated carefully to produce effects. The impressionist painting surface is typically opaque.
 - The paint is applied to a white or light-coloured ground. Previously, painters often used dark grey or strongly coloured grounds.

References

- https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Camille_Pissarro

Édouard Manet (1832-1883), Le Déjeuner sur l'herbe (Luncheon on the Grass), 1862-63, 208 x 265.5 cm, Musée d'Orsay

- Manet was born in 1832 to a wealthy Parisian family. His father was a judge and expected him to go into law but with his uncle's encouragement he studied art. His first success was to have two paintings accepted by the Salon in 1861 and his work was noted for its 'slapdash' style which intrigued many new artists.
- Manet is regarded as the leader of the Impressionists but this is misleading as he never exhibited at any of the eight Impressionist exhibitions. He was a thoughtful painter who mixed with the Impressionists and his revolutionary work encouraged critics to see him as part of the avant garde that included the Impressionists.
- This painting was created in 1862 and 1863 and was rejected by the Salon jury of 1863 so Manet seized the opportunity to exhibit this and two other paintings in the 1863 Salon des Refusés where the painting sparked public notoriety and controversy. The piece is now in the Musée d'Orsay in Paris and a smaller, earlier version can be seen at the Courtauld Gallery, London.
- A brightly lit naked woman is having lunch with two dressed men. In the background a lightly clad woman bathes in a stream. Too large in comparison with the figures in the foreground, she seems to float above them. The roughly painted background lacks depth – giving the viewer the impression that the scene is not taking place outdoors, but in a studio. This impression is reinforced by the use of broad "photographic" light, which casts almost no shadows. The man on the right wears a flat hat with a tassel, of a kind normally worn indoors.

- A nude woman casually lunching with fully dressed men was an affront to audiences' sense of propriety, though Émile Zola, a contemporary of Manet's, argued that this was not uncommon in paintings found in the Louvre; he also felt that such a reaction came from viewing art differently than "analytic" painters like Manet, who use a painting's subject as a pretext to paint. Two directly relevant Old Masters are an engraving of Raphael's Judgement of Paris (c. 1515) by Raimondi and The Pastoral Concert (c. 1510), by Giorgione or Titian.
- The female nude is clearly thought to be Victorine Meurent, the woman who became his favourite and frequently portrayed model, that later was the subject of Olympia. The male figure on the right was based on a combination of his two brothers, Eugène and Gustave Manet. The other man is based on his brother-in-law and Dutch sculptor named Ferdinand Leenhoff.

Notes

- Manet's wife was Suzanne Leenhoff who was hired as Manet's piano teacher. They had a secret affair and a child, Leon Leenhoff, out of wedlock. It has been speculated that the boy may have been the son of either Édouard or his father Augustus. They married in 1863, a year after Augustus had died when Leon was 11 years old.
- Manet met Edgar Degas in 1862 and they developed a lifelong friendship although a portrait of Manet and his wife that Degas painted in 1868 was slashed through the likeness of Suzanne from top to bottom. Degas took back the painting but never repainted it.

Édouard Manet (1832-1883), Olympia, 1865-66, 130.5 x 190 cm, Musée d'Orsay

- Olympia is a painting by Édouard Manet, first exhibited at the 1865 Paris Salon, which shows a nude woman ('Olympia') lying on a bed being brought flowers by a black servant. Olympia was modelled by Victorine Meurent. Olympia's confrontational gaze caused shock and astonishment when the painting was first exhibited because a number of details in the picture identified her as a prostitute. The French government acquired the painting in 1890 after a public subscription organized by Claude Monet.
- The whole of modern art is sometimes traced back to this painting (or Le Déjeuner sur l'herbe) because of the way it which it confronts the viewer with the reality of prostitution. Other paintings of the nude could be presented as academic studies or classical goddesses but every aspect of this painting screams prostitution. The orchid in her hair, the black cat, the cast off slipper, the black servant, the gift of flowers, the confrontational gaze, her thin, girlish body, the dishevelled bed and even her name 'Olympia' was one used by prostitutes. It is painted quickly, the lighting is harsh, mid-tones are eliminated emphasizing her as a real woman.
- It references many Old Masters but the most obvious reference is to Titian's Venus of Urbino (c. 1538). One difference that historians have commented on is that the hand of Venus is enticing but Olympia's left hand appears to block, which has been interpreted as symbolic of her sexual independence from men and her role as a prostitute, granting or restricting access to her body in return for payment. Manet has replaced the dog symbolising fidelity with a cat that was often used to symbolize prostitution. The Venus of Urbino was commissioned by Guidobaldo II della Rovere, the Duke of Urbino, possibly to celebrate his 1534 marriage.

Notes

- Victorine Meurent (1844-1927) was a French painter and model who exhibited in the Salon six times from 1875. She had red hair and was short earning her the nickname La Crevette ('The Shrimp'). She played the guitar and violin and sang in café-concerts. She inspired two historical novels (by George Moore and Debra Fineman) and appears as a character in other novels and films.

References

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Olympia_\(Manet\))

<https://www.khanacademy.org/humanities/becoming-modern/avant-garde-france/realism/v/manet-olympia-1863-exhibited-1865>

<http://www.visual-arts-cork.com/paintings-analysis/olympia-manet.htm>

Claude Monet (1840–1926), Déjeuner sur l'herbe (right section), 1865-1866, Musée d'Orsay

- “In the early 1860s, four young painters met in art school and discovered that they shared an interest in painting landscapes and contemporary life. They often ventured into the countryside together to paint in the open air, but not for the purpose of making sketches to be developed into carefully finished works in the studio, as was customary at the time. They painted finished works on location. These young rebels became legends: Claude Monet (1840-1926), Pierre-Auguste Renoir (1841-1919), Alfred Sisley (1839-1899), and Frédéric Bazille (1841-1870) discovered that by painting in sunlight, directly from nature, and making bold use of the vivid synthetic pigments that had recently been invented, they could develop a lighter and brighter style of painting than the Barbizon painters.
- At that time in Paris, an artist was not accepted into society or considered important unless his work was juried into an annual show of artworks called the Salon de Paris. Yet these young painters and their radical approaches were rejected by the Salon, so on April 15, at 35 boulevard des Capucines in Paris, Monet and friends Renoir, Camille Pissarro, and Sisley organized a month-long show of their paintings.

References

<http://paintoutside.com/wp/the-history-of-plein-air-painting/>

Claude Monet (1840–1926), Impression, Sunrise, 1872, 48 × 63 cm, Musée Marmottan Monet (30 minute walk from Eiffel Tower, over the Seine and then due West)

- The first Impressionist exhibition was held in Paris in 1874. The term Impressionist was not actually used until the Third Impressionist Exhibition in 1877. It was originally a disparaging term used by the critic (painter and playwright) Louis LeRoy (1812-1885) in the satirical magazine Le Charivari. He was describing the painting Impression, Sunrise by Claude Monet. The exhibition was held by The Anonymous Society of Painters, Sculptors, Engravers, etc. there were 135 works by 30 artists and about 4,000 people attended.
- That began successful careers for the Impressionist artists. Monet remained poor until the 1890s when he started to become wealthy from his painting and later built a home in Giverny, France, where he planted his now-famous gardens and the water lilies that became the subject of many of his paintings.
- It was rare for women to become artists at this time but there were some trailblazers, including American Mary Cassatt (1844-1926), Berthe Morisot (1841-1895, who married Manet's brother Eugène) and Eva Gonzalès (1849-1883) — who was the only pupil Manet ever took.
- Attributes of Impressionism

- Modern life subjects including railway stations and contemporary fashions.
- Accurate depiction of light and the colours of nature, no black, with colours in the shadows.
- Painting *en plein air using small strokes and dabs of bright colour to capture the transitoriness of nature.
- Loose, 'painterly' style, like a sketch, placing pure colours directly on the canvas. The paintings lacked 'finish'.
- A small group of artists broke away from the stranglehold of the annual Salon, an official exhibition sponsored by the French government through its Académie des Beaux-Arts. The Impressionists mounted eight shows from 1874 to 1886, although very few of the core artists exhibited in every show and Manet exhibited at none of them. After 1886, the dealers organized solo exhibition or small group shows, and each artist concentrated on his or her own career. They remained good friends (except for Degas who stopped talking to Pissarro) and Monet survived the longest and died in 1926.
- Younger artists started to take their art in different directions and they became known as the Post-Impressionists who include Paul Cézanne, Paul Gauguin, Georges Seurat and Vincent van Gogh.

Notes

- The leading Impressionists (in alphabetical order) were:
 - Frédéric Bazille (who only posthumously participated in the Impressionist exhibitions) (1841–1870)
 - Gustave Caillebotte (who, younger than the others, joined forces with them in the mid-1870s) (1848–1894)
 - Mary Cassatt (American-born, she lived in Paris and participated in four Impressionist exhibitions) (1844–1926)
 - Paul Cézanne (although he later broke away from the Impressionists) (1839–1906)
 - Edgar Degas (who despised the term Impressionist) (1834–1917)
 - Armand Guillaumin (1841–1927)
 - Édouard Manet (the second oldest, he did not participate in any of the Impressionist exhibitions) (1832–1883)
 - Claude Monet (the most prolific of the Impressionists and the one who embodies their aesthetic most obviously) (1840–1926)
 - Berthe Morisot (1841–1895)
 - Camille Pissarro (the oldest, the 'father of Impressionism' although this title is sometimes given to Manet) (1830–1903)
 - Pierre-Auguste Renoir (1841–1919)
 - Alfred Sisley (1839–1899)
- 1874, The First Impressionist Exhibition was named retrospectively as the term

‘impressionism’ was used as an insult by the critic (painter and playwright) Louis LeRoy (1812-1885). It was held by The Anonymous Society of Painters, Sculptors, Engravers, etc. at 35 Boulevard des Capucines, Paris, France. There were 135 works and about 4,000 visitors. The 30 artists who exhibited were Zacharie Astruc, Antoine-Ferdinand Attendu, Édouard Béliard, Eugène Boudin, Félix Braquemond, Édouard Brandon, Pierre-Isidore Bureau, Adolphe-Félix Cals, Paul Cézanne, Gustave Colin, Louis Debras, Edgar Degas, Jean-Baptiste Armand Guillaumin, Louis LaTouche, Ludovic-Napoléon Lepic, Stanislas Lepine, Jean-Baptiste-Léopold Levert, Alfred Meyer, Auguste De Molins, Claude Monet, Mademoiselle Berthe Morisot, Mulot-Durivage, Joseph DeNittis, Auguste-Louis-Marie Ottin, Léon-Auguste Ottin, Camille Pissarro, Pierre-Auguste Renoir, Stanislas-Henri Rouart, Léopold Robert, Alfred Sisley.

- 1876, the Second Impressionist Exhibition showed 252 works by only 19 artists who were Édouard Béliard, Pierre-Isidore Bureau, Gustave Caillebotte, Félix-Adolphe Cals, Edgar Degas, Marcellin Desboutin, Jacques François (an anonymous woman), Alphonse Legros, Jean-Baptiste-Léopold Levert, Ludovic-Napoléon Lepic, Jean-Baptiste Millet (Jean-François Millet's brother), Claude Monet, Berthe Morisot, Léon-Auguste Ottin fils, Camille Pissarro, Pierre-Auguste Renoir, Stanislas-Henri Rouart, Alfred Sisley, Charles Tillot.
- 1877 the term Impressionist was used in the title of the exhibition for the first time so this could be called the first Impressionist exhibition so named. There were 241 works and 18 artists who were Gustave Caillebotte, Adolphe-Félix Cals, Paul Cézanne, Frédéric Cordet, Edgar Degas, Jean-Baptiste Armand Guillaumin, Jacques-François (an anonymous woman), Franc Lamy, Jean-Baptiste-Léopold Levert, Alphonse Maureau, Claude Monet, Berthe Morisot, Ludovic Piette, Camille Pissarro, Pierre-Auguste Renoir, Henri Rouart, Alfred Sisley, Charles Tillot.
- 1879, Fourth Impressionist Exhibition had 15,400 visitors and was the first that was financially successful even though Cézanne, Renoir, Morisot, Guillaumin and Sisley were missing. There were 246 works by 16 artists who were Félix Braquemond, Marie Braquemond, Gustave Caillebotte, Adolphe-Félix Cals, Mary Cassatt, Edgar Degas, Louis Forain, Paul Gauguin (not in the brochure), Albert Lebourg, Claude Monet, Ludovic Piette (not in the brochure), Camille Pissarro, Henri Rouart, Henri Somm, Charles Tillot, Federico Zandomeneghi.
- 1880 Fifth Impressionist Exhibition.
- 1881 Sixth Impressionist Exhibition.
- 1882 Seventh Impressionist Exhibition.
- 1886 Eighth Impressionist Exhibition. The artists were Marie Braquemond, Mary Cassatt, Edgar Degas, Jean-Louis Forain, Paul Gauguin, Armand Guillaumin, Mme. Berthe Morisot, Camille Pissarro, Lucien Pissarro, Odilon Redon, Henri Rouart, Émile Schuffenecker, Georges Seurat, Paul Signac, Charles Tillot, Paul-Victor Vignon, Federico Zandomeneghi.

References

<http://paintoutside.com/wp/the-history-of-plein-air-painting/>

Paul Cézanne (1839–1906), Mont Sainte-Victoire, c. 1887, 67 × 92 cm, Courtauld Institute of Art

- The last Impressionist exhibition was the eighth held in 1886. By this date there were a number of artists working in different styles. When they were exhibited in London in 1910 they were collectively called the Post-Impressionists as a collective term for a wide range of styles and approaches.
- One of the Post-Impressionist artists was Paul Cézanne (1839–1906) although he had been painting at the same time as the Impressionists and exhibited at a number of the Impressionist exhibitions. His approach which emphasizes the underlying geometric forms of nature was different from the other Impressionist artists and Cezanne was very influential on the future directions of art.
- Paul Cézanne was born in Aix-en-Provence in the south of France to a wealthy banker. The family fortune meant that he could work independently without the need for commissions or compromise. He attended drawing school but he also attended law school to please his father. Later, with the encouragement of his friend Emile Zola, and against his father's wishes he left Aix to work in Paris. He later reconciled with his father and was left 400,000 francs when his father died which rid him of all financial worries.

- In Paris he met and was influenced by the Impressionist Camille Pissarro. His aim in life was to find a way to represent accurately in paint what he saw in front of him. To achieve this he reduced what he saw to simple forms and colour planes.
- He described his aim as follows, 'I want to make of impressionism something solid and lasting like the art in the museums'. He also described this process as recreating Poussin 'after nature' by combining his observation of nature with the permanence of classical composition.
- Cézanne became the most influential artist of the Post-Impressionist era, widely appreciated toward the end of his life for insisting that painting stay in touch with its material and almost sculptural origins. He was known as the 'Master of Aix' and paved the way for twentieth-century modernism. In retrospect, his work is the most important link between the transitory elements of Impressionism and the more materialist art movements, such as Fauvism, Cubism, Expressionism, and even abstraction.

Paul Cézanne (1839–1906), Bathers (Les Grandes Baigneuses), 1898-1905, 127.2 x 196.1 cm, National Gallery

- Cézanne Painted many bathers from the 1870s onwards and towards the end of his life he painted three large-scale pictures of groups of female bathers. This is the only one in England. He worked on the painting for seven years and it was unfinished at the time of his death. Each version of the bathers gradually moved away from traditional representations to give a timeless quality to his work.
- Many old masters including Titian and Poussin produced pictures of groups of female nudes in the landscape, often with a mythological narrative.
- Cézanne took a different approach and he dealt with the nudes as forms integrated into the landscape in terms of their size, composition, shape and colour. The forms are architectural in their solidity and their grounded structure.
- When exhibited in 1907, this painting became an inspiration for the emerging Cubist movement; both Picasso and Matisse took a strong interest in it.
- It is claimed that Cézanne said, "I am a shy man, a bohemian ... people mock me. I don't have the power to fight back. People think I am crazy because I am isolated. At least that way no one can get their hooks into me." Cézanne did not want to be influenced by other artists and worked in isolation discovering new ways to represent reality.

- Cézanne continued painting until the end of his life. At the age of 67 he was caught in a storm while painting in a field. He continued working for two hours in the rain before returning home. He collapsed on the way home and although he regained consciousness he died a few days later of pneumonia.

References

- https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Bathers_\(Cézanne\))

Georges Seurat (1859–1891), Une baignade à Asnières (Bathers in Asnières), 1884, retouched 1887, 201 × 300 cm, National Gallery

- Another group of bathers organised in a very different way. It is a large painting for which he produced drawings and colour sketches.
- It shows a popular bathing spot on the left-bank of the Seine above the two bridges at Asnières and Clichy. Asnières was a suburb in north-east Paris which Seurat could access by railway. The figures on the bank are looking across to La Grande Jatte, the subject of Seurat's next large-scale painting. Unlike Monet and Renoir, the view is not idealised and we can see factories and smoking chimneys in the background. Monet's freshness is replaced by a monumental, static stillness. The figures are ordinary, working-class people out for a day's enjoyment by the river but they have been frozen in time and so acquire an almost classical timelessness.
- With the exception of the woman on the ferry, the painting contains only men and boys. The middle-class Sunday day out with the family was not taken up by working class men who preferred a day off with their friends. Seurat worked on the spot drawing with Conté crayon and painting oil sketches on small wooden panels.

- The foreground and background are fused together as distance is compressed. The colours are muted and chalky. Seurat applied a cross-hatch of colours on a undertint in the appropriate colour. The surface of the water is made lighter or darker to emphasize the outline of the figures. He avoids strong colours and colour clashes and he uses earth colours often avoided by the Impressionists.
- The 'sketchiness' of Impressionism has been replaced by a feeling of order, calm and an overall harmony of forms and colours.
- It was rejected by the Salon jury of 1884 and even the Society of Independent Artists placed it in the canteen but fellow artists noticed it and were influenced by Seurat's new approach.
- Georges Seurat was born in Paris and his father became wealthy through property speculation. He studied sculpture and drawing and then became a student at the prestigious École des Beaux-Arts where he followed a conventional course copying the old masters. He developed a theory of contrasts which he applied to his later work. He also studied Eugene Delacroix carefully and made detailed notes. Following one year of military service he continued refining his technique in Paris in a studio he shared with a friend. His first exhibited work was shown at the Salon of 1883.
- He spent 1883 working on this painting, his first major work. He departed from the Impressionist approach by making many detailed drawing and sketches to plan the work. Bathers at Asnières was rejected by the Paris Salon, and instead he showed it at the Groupe des Artistes Indépendants in May 1884. Seurat, with other artists, including Paul Signac, set up a Society of Independent Artists and Seurat's ideas on pointillism influenced the group.
- In the summer of the following year, 1884, Seurat began work on A Sunday Afternoon on the Island of La Grande Jatte, which took him two years to complete. The painting shows members of each of the social classes participating in various park activities. The tiny juxtaposed dots of multi-coloured paint allow the viewer's eye to blend colours optically, rather than having the colours physically blended on the canvas. It took Seurat two years to complete this three metre wide painting, much of which he spent in the park sketching in preparation for the work (there are about 60 studies). It is now in the permanent collection of the Art Institute of Chicago.
- His colour theory was based on that of Michel Eugène Chevreul who recognised that the colour of a section of tapestry depended on the surrounding colours. He found that two colours placed close together looked like a third colour at a distance and this formed the basis of the pointillist technique. Ogden Rood pointed out that this colour would be more intense and more pleasing to the eye than if the pigments had been mixed beforehand.
- He kept his relationship with his model (Madeleine Knobloch, 1868–1903) secret from his family and they had a son in 1890. In 1891, aged 31, he died at his family home of unknown causes. His son died two weeks later of the same disease which could have been diphtheria or meningitis or pneumonia.

Vincent van Gogh (1853–1890), Wheat Field with Crows, 1890, Van Gogh Museum, Amsterdam

- In 1890 Vincent van Gogh wrote he had made three paintings in Auvers of large fields of wheat under troubled skies and Wheat Field with Crows, an oil on canvas, may have been one. It is generally described as his last painting but we do not know if this is the case. It is certainly one of his last paintings.
- Vincent Willem van Gogh (1853-1890) was a Dutch Post-Impressionist who had a profound influence on twentieth-century art. He died when he was 37 and in just over a decade produced 2,100 artworks including 860 oil paintings, most of them in the last two years of his life. He sold only one painting in his lifetime and committed suicide after years of poverty and mental illness supported only by his brother, a Parisian art dealer.
- Van Gogh came from a well-off family and started work as an art dealer. He was transferred to London but became depressed and turned to religion. He spent time as a missionary in the coal towns of southern Belgium and, after moving back to his parents home, took up painting in 1881. His early work depicts labourers in earthy tones and it was not until he went south that he painted landscapes in vivid colours. He worked in Paris for two years 1886-88 before moving south to Arles where he lived in the 'Yellow House' for a short period with Paul Gauguin. They developed a way of using colour to represent their inner emotions and feelings. He suffered from violent episodes and delusions and there was a violent encounter that led to a break up of his relationship with Gauguin. He committed himself to a mental hospital where his condition stabilised and he had a productive period painting. He moved under the care of a homeopathic doctor, Paul Gachet, and while there his brother, Theo, wrote to him to say he could no longer support him. A few weeks later van Gogh walked into a wheat field and shot himself in the chest and died two days later. Originally viewed as a madman his reputation improved as his work was seen to influence the German Expressionists and the Fauves. His life story has been repeatedly retold as it illustrates the tragic life of the romantic ideal of the tortured artistic genius. He is now generally regarded as exceptionally talented, original and very influential but his mental instability, rather than empowering his art is seen as inhibiting and frustrating it.

Paul Gauguin (1848–1903), Where Do We Come From? What Are We? Where Are We Going?, 1897, 139 × 375 cm, Boston Museum of Fine Arts
D'où Venons Nous / Que Sommes Nous / Où Allons Nous, Three questions he was taught at his catholic seminary from the age of 11 to 16.

- Gauguin considered this work, created in 1897, to be his masterpiece and the summation of all his ideas. He had left France for Tahiti six years previously and he created a style that reflected his personal mythology. His letters suggest that this fresco-like painting should be read from right to left starting with the sleeping child. The various figures represent the deepest questions of human existence, for example, the blue idol represents 'the Beyond'. The old woman on the far left is close to death and accepts her fate with resignation.
- Primitive art, the Other, to be found again in Picasso, Demoiselles d'Avignon

References

- <http://www.mfa.org/collections/object/where-do-we-come-from-what-are-we-where-are-we-going-32558>

Henri Matisse (1869-1954), Portrait of Madame Matisse (The Green Stripe), 1905, 40.50 x 32.5 cm, Statens Museum for Kunst, Copenhagen

- This is a portrait of Matisse's wife Amélie and it is one of his most famous works. Light and shade have been translated into planes of colour. Matisse had just returned to Paris from the fishing village of Collioure ('coll-e-your'). Here, he and André Derain engaged in ever-wilder painterly experiments intended to release colour from its descriptive function, allowing it to act as a force in its own right.
- Fauvism is the style of les Fauves (French for "the wild beasts"), a loose group of early twentieth-century Modern artists whose works emphasized painterly qualities and strong colour over the representational or realistic values retained by Impressionism. While Fauvism as a style began around 1900 and continued beyond 1910, the movement as such lasted only a few years, 1904–1908, and had three exhibitions. The leaders of the movement were Henri Matisse and André Derain.
- In 1888 Gauguin had said,
 - "How do you see these trees? They are yellow. So, put in yellow; this shadow, rather blue, paint it with pure ultramarine; these red leaves? Put in vermillion."

- Fauvism can be seen as a type of Expressionism as it uses colour to express the artists personal feelings.
- Gustave Moreau was the movement's inspirational teacher until Matisse was recognised as the leader in 1904.
- In 1896 Matisse visited John Peter Russell and saw his first Impressionist painting. He was so shocked he had to leave. He returned a year later and started to paint in the Impressionist style influenced by van Gogh, a close friend of Russell.
- In 1901, Maurice de Vlaminck saw van Gogh's work in an exhibition for the first time and began to squeeze paint directly from the tube onto his canvases.
- In 1905, Henri Matisse, André Derain, Maurice de Vlaminck and others exhibited at the Salon d'Automne of 1905, the critic Louis Vauxcelles disparaged the painters with the phrase "Donatello chez les fauves" ("Donatello among the wild beasts"), contrasting their "orgy of tones" with a Renaissance-style sculpture that shared the room with them. Henri Rousseau was not a Fauve, but his large jungle scene The Hungry Lion Throws Itself on the Antelope was exhibited near Matisse's work and may have had an influence on the wording, Vauxcelles' comment was printed on 17 October 1905 in Gil Blas, a daily newspaper, and passed into popular usage.
- Gil Blas was the hero of an early eighteenth-century French novel set in Spain about an ordinary youth's adventures. It influenced Henry Fielding Tom Jones and Charles Dickens Nicholas Nickleby.

References

- <http://www.smk.dk/en/explore-the-art/highlights/henri-matisse-portrait-of-madame-matisse-the-green-line/>

Henri Matisse (1869-1954), Luxe, Calme et Volupté ('Luxury, Calm and Pleasure'), 1904, 98 x 118.5 cm, Musée d'Orsay, Paris

- Many of the Fauve characteristics first cohered in Matisse's painting, Luxe, Calme et Volupté ("Luxury, Calm and Pleasure"), which he painted in the summer of 1904, whilst in Saint-Tropez with Paul Signac and Henri-Edmond Cross. The painting was first shown at the Salon des Indépendants in the spring of 1905 and then at the Salon d'Automne that autumn.
- MoMA website,
 - "Matisse made this painting in the south of France, in the town of Saint-Tropez, while vacationing with family and friends. The forms in the painting—the figures, tree, bush, sea and sky—are created from spots of colour, jabs of the brush that build up the picture. Matisse favoured discrete strokes of colour that emphasized the painted surface rather than a realistic scene. He also used a palette of pure, high-pitched primary colours (blue, green, yellow, and orange) to render the landscape, and then outlined the figures in blue. The painting takes its title, which means 'Luxury, calm, and pleasure,' from a line by the 19th-century poet Charles Baudelaire, and it shares the poem's subject: escape to an imaginary, tranquil refuge.

- Matisse said, 'What I dream of is an art of balance, of purity and serenity, devoid of troubling or depressing subject matter.' Matisse wasn't interested in conflict or politics. This is an early painting by Matisse, and yet the idea of balance and serenity found here would remain a consistent theme in his work throughout the next 50 years."

References

- Museum of Modern Art: http://www.moma.org/learn/moma_learning/henri-rousseau-the-dream-1910

Henri Matisse (1869-1954), The Joy of Life (Le bonheur de vivre), 1906, 176.5 x 240.7 cm, Barnes Foundation, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Pauwels Franck (c. 1540-1596), Allegories of Love, c. 1585, Kunsthistorisches Museum, Vienna

An engraving by Agostino Carracci (1557–1602) is in the Ashmolean Museum

- Along with Picasso's The Young Ladies of Avignon (Les Femmes d'Alger) this painting is regarded as one of the pillars of early modernism. The monumental canvas was first exhibited at the Salon des Indépendants of 1906, where its cadmium reds and spatial distortions caused public protests and outrage. It is often considered his greatest Fauvre painting.
- Kahn Academy,
 - "The painting was purchased by a wealthy expatriate American writer-poet named Gertrude Stein and her brother, Leo Stein, who shared a home filled with modern art at 27 Rue de Fleurus, in Paris. This was also the location for Gertrude Stein's weekly salon. Here, Matisse, Apollinaire, the young and largely unknown Picasso and other members of the avant-garde came together to exchange ideas. Stein was able to attract such a crowd not only because of her literary skills but because she often provided financial support to these nearly destitute artists. In fact, the Steins bought Matisse's Bonheur de Vivre soon after its completion and hung it in their dining room for all to see. One person who saw it there was Picasso. By all accounts the painting's fame was too much for the terribly competitive young Spaniard. He determined to out do Matisse, and he did with his 1907 canvas, *Demoiselles d'Avignon (MoMA)."

Notes

- Pauwels Franck, known in Italy as Paolo Fiammingo and Paolo dei Franceschi (c. 1540 - 1596), was a Flemish painter, mainly of landscapes with mythological and religious scenes, who was active in Venice for most of his life. He started in Italy as an assistant in Tintoretto's workshop, where he specialized in landscape backgrounds. Although he painted many religious pictures, his reputation was based on a particular type of mythological fantasy derived from the example of Giorgione. He gave a Venetian softness and grace to the theme of Classical demigods in a landscape, and his dreamlike landscapes anticipate the Italianate Flemish school.

References

- <https://www.khanacademy.org/humanities/art-1010/early-abstraction/fauvism-matisse/a/matisse-bonheur-de-vivre>
- http://www.wga.hu/bio_m/f/fiamming/biograph.html

Maurice de Vlaminck (1876–1958), The Seine at Chatou, 1906, 82.5 x 102 cm, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York

Maurice de Vlaminck (1876–1958), The Seine at Chatou, 1906, 82.5 x 102 cm, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York

André Derain (1880-1954), 1906, Charing Cross Bridge, London, National Gallery of Art, Washington, DC

- André Derain was a French artist, painter, sculptor and co-founder of Fauvism with Henri Matisse.
- Derain was born just outside Paris and when he was 15 he began to study painting on his own. He studied to become an engineer but also attended painting classes where he met Matisse. In 1900, aged 20, he shared a studio with Maurice de Vlaminck. His painting was interrupted by three years of military service and on his return he convinced his parents he should give up engineering and devote himself to painting full-time. He attended the prestigious Académie Julian.
- During the summer of 1905 he worked with Matisse in the Mediterranean village of Collioure and later that year displayed their work at the Salon d'Automne. The vivid, unnatural colours led the critic Louis Vauxcelles to jokingly dismiss their work as that of les Fauves, or 'the wild beasts', marking the start of the Fauvist movement.
- In March 1906, the well-known art dealer Ambroise Vollard sent Derain to London to produce a series of paintings with the city as subject. In 30 paintings Derain presented a portrait of London that was radically different from anything done by previous painters of the city such as Whistler or Monet. With bold colours and compositions, Derain painted multiple pictures of the Thames and Tower Bridge. These London paintings remain among his most popular work.

- Art critic T.G Rosenthal wrote, 'Not since Monet has anyone made London seem so fresh and yet remain quintessentially English. Some of his views of the Thames use the Pointillist technique of multiple dots, although by this time, because the dots have become much larger, it is rather more simply the separation of colours called Divisionism and it is peculiarly effective in conveying the fragmentation of colour in moving water in sunlight.'
- In 1907 art dealer Daniel-Henry Kahnweiler purchased Derain's entire studio, granting Derain financial stability. He moved to Montmartre to be near his friend Pablo Picasso and other noted artists.
- Fernande Olivier, Picasso's mistress at the time, described Derain as:
 - 'Slim, elegant, with a lively colour and enamelled black hair. With an English chic, somewhat striking. Fancy waistcoats, ties in crude colours, red and green. Always a pipe in his mouth, phlegmatic, mocking, cold, an arguer.'

Pablo Picasso, Les Femmes d'Alger, 244 x 234 cm, Museum of Modern Art, New York

Pablo Picasso, Nus (Nudes), 1905, graphite on paper

- Pablo Picasso completed Les Femmes d'Alger in 1907. Les Femmes d'Alger appeared in the May 1910 edition of the Architectural Record, a US publication. Although it was labelled a "study", numerous sources confirm that the painting itself was reproduced therein. It wasn't published in France until 1925, when it appeared in La Révolution surréaliste.
- In July 2007, Newsweek published a two-page article about Les Femmes d'Alger describing it as the "most influential work of art of the last 100 years"
- MoMA website,
 - "Les Femmes d'Alger marks a radical break from traditional composition and perspective in painting. It depicts five naked women with figures composed of flat, splintered planes and faces inspired by Iberian sculpture and African masks. The compressed space the figures inhabit appears to project forward in jagged shards; a fiercely pointed slice of melon in the still life of fruit at the bottom of the composition teeters on an impossibly upturned table top. These strategies would be significant in Picasso's subsequent development of Cubism, charted in this gallery with a selection of the increasingly fragmented compositions he created in this period. Picasso unveiled the monumental painting in his Paris studio after months of revision. The Avignon of the work's title is a reference to a street in Barcelona famed for its brothel. In Picasso's preparatory studies for the work, the figure at the left was a man, but the artist eliminated this anecdotal detail in the final painting."

- The two figures on the right, seem influenced by African masks. Picasso emphatically denied the influence of African masks on the painting: "African art? Never heard of it!" (L'art nègre? Connais pas!), asserting instead that the primitivism in his work during, before and after the painting of Les Femmes d'Alger (O.J. version O), from spring 1906 through the spring of 1907 was primarily influenced by Iberian sculpture.

References

- <http://www.moma.org/collection/works/79766>
- https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Les_Femmes_d'Alger_\(O.J._version_O\))

Henri Matisse, La fille aux yeux verts (The Girl with Green Eyes), 1908, 66 x 50.5 cm, Museum of Modern Art, San Francisco

Pablo Picasso, Portrait of Clovis Sagot, 1909, 82 x 66 cm, Kusthalle, Hamburg

Vincent van Gogh, The Road Menders, 1889, 73.5 x 92.5 cm, The Phillips Collection, Washington

Paul Gauguin, Parau na te Varua ino (Words of the Devil), 1892, 91.7 x 68.5 cm, National Gallery, Washington

Paul Cézanne, Old Woman with Rosary, 1895-96, 80.6 x 65.5 cm, National Gallery, London

Edouard Manet, At the Café, 1878, 77 x 83 cm, Museum Oskar Reinhart, Winterthur

• Manet and Post-Impressionism, 1910

- One of the four most significant exhibitions of the century.
 - Manet and Post-Impressionism, 1910
 - International Surrealist Exhibition, 1936 at which Salvador Dalí attempted to deliver a lecture whilst wearing a deep-sea diver's suit and holding two hounds on a leash, but he had to be rescued after nearly suffocating.
 - This is Tomorrow, 1956
 - Sensation, Saatchi Collection, Royal Academy, 1997

- Britain was made aware of Impressionism by the Durand-Ruel Gallery but their work was not widely known until the exhibitions by Roger Fry (1866-1934). Paul Durand-Ruel (1831-1922) was a French art dealer who supported and championed the Impressionists. During the Franco-Prussian War, of 1870–71, Durand-Ruel left Paris and escaped to London, where he met up with a number of French artists including Charles-François Daubigny, Claude Monet and Camille Pissarro. In December 1870 he opened the first of ten Annual Exhibitions of the Society of French Artists at his new London gallery at 168 New Bond Street. Durand-Ruel organised an exhibition of Impressionist painters at the Grafton Gallery in 1905 but it also featured Old Masters and caused little controversy.
- Durand-Ruel once said, "The American public does not laugh. It buys!" "Without America," he said, "I would have been lost, ruined, after having bought so many Monets and Renoirs. The two exhibitions there in 1886 saved me. The American public bought moderately . . . but thanks to that public, Monet and Renoir were enabled to live and after that the French public followed suit."
- In November 1910, Fry organised the exhibition Manet and the Post-Impressionists (a term which he coined) at the Grafton Galleries, London. This exhibition was the first to prominently feature Gauguin, Manet, Matisse, and Van Gogh in England and brought their art to the public. Virginia Woolf later said, "On or about December 1910 human character changed," referring to the effect this exhibit had on the world. Fry followed it up with the Second Post-Impressionist Exhibition in 1912.
- The exhibition established Cézanne, Gauguin, Van Gogh, Matisse, Picasso and to some extent Seurat as the pre-eminent figures of Modernism. Manet was already an established figure which is why his name was included in the title of the exhibition. There were nine works by Edouard Manet, 21 by Paul Cézanne, 42 by Paul Gauguin, 25 by Vincent van Gogh, 11 by Pablo Picasso (including seven drawings), 14 drawings, eight sculptures and six paintings by Henri Matisse, two by Georges Seurat, three by Paul Signac and a number of other artists.

Notes

- Roger Fry was an English painter and critic, and a member of the Bloomsbury Group. Establishing his reputation as a scholar of the Old Masters, he became an advocate of more recent developments in French painting, to which he gave the name Post-Impressionism. He was the first figure to raise public awareness of modern art in Britain, and emphasised the formal properties of paintings over the "associated ideas" conjured in the viewer by their representational content.
- He was described by the art historian Kenneth Clark as "incomparably the greatest influence on taste since Ruskin ... In so far as taste can be changed by one man, it was changed by Roger Fry".

References

- http://www.reading.ac.uk/web/FILES/art-REF/BurlDEC10pp782_93.pdf

NEXT WEEK:
CUBISM,
ABSTRACTION
& THE BRITISH AVANT GARDE

Dr. Laurence Shafe
art@shafe.uk
www.shafe.uk